Weather of Concern

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 A Chance of Afternoon and Evening Thunderstorms Over the Northern and Eastern Mountains Sunday through Tuesday ***

 Southwest – West Gusts to 25-35 mph from the Cascade-Sierra Crest East Monday-Tuesday ***

Strong high pressure will remain over Northern California until early Sunday. Temperatures will be 15-20 degrees above normal again today. Afternoon humidity will be 10-20% in many inland areas. Light overnight downslope winds are expected tonight. Some mid and upper slope locations will only see overnight relative humidity (RH) recovery to 30-40%. Isolated thunderstorms today will stay mainly in the Sierra from the Lake Tahoe area south.

As the high pressure ridge weakens and moves east on Sunday a low pressure trough will begin to replace it over Northern California. The sea breeze will bring cool humid air into coastal regions and the delta breeze will begin to bring relief from the heat wave to the Sacramento Valley and foothills during the afternoon. Areas inland from the coast but not exposed to marine influences will remain hot and dry on Sunday. Thunderstorm chances will increase over the higher terrain late on Sunday.

On Monday and Tuesday isolated afternoon thunderstorms are possible in the northern and eastern mountains. Afternoon South-West winds will gust to 25 mph in many areas, and 25-35 mph from the Cascade-Sierra crest east. Temperatures will be closer to normal Monday through Wednesday. High pressure will return with warmer temperatures Thursday through next weekend.

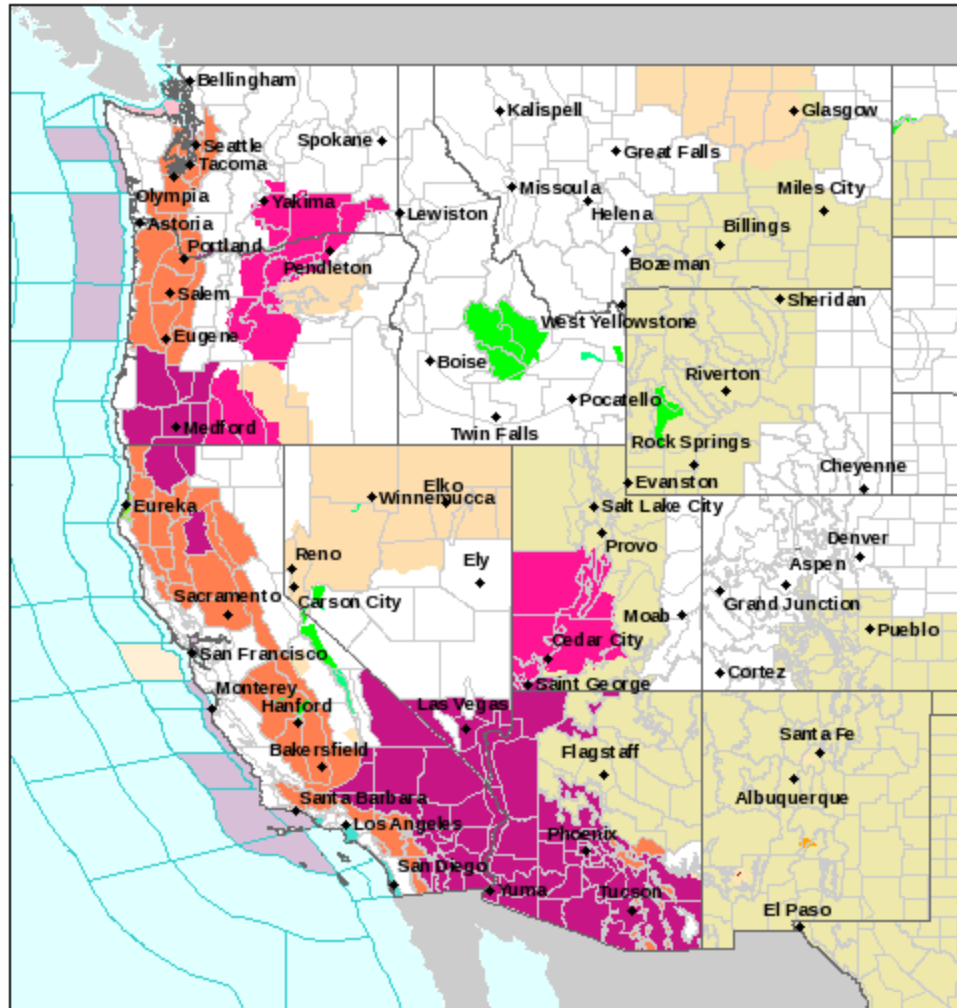

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Isolated showers and thunderstorms today Cooler weather begins Monday

A weak low pressure area spinning off the coast is pulling a slug of mid and high level moisture into the area. This is resulting in some showers and one or two lightning strikes offshore. The vast majority of this moisture will remain offshore, but some virga or isolated thunderstorms will be possible later today from western Santa Barbara County northward toward Monterey County. The storms, if they do make it ashore, will be extremely few in number and are not expected to lead to any new ignitions. No further thunderstorm activity is expected in this area beyond today. Very warm temperatures can be expected over the weekend with highs in the mid to upper 90s in the valleys and foothills to 105 in the San Joaquin Valley to 115 in the low desert. Northwest winds of 15-25 mph will be possible the next several days across the Kern County Mountains into the Antelope Valley. Isolated afternoon convection will continue across the highest elevations of the Sierras each day through Monday. A shift to a cooler weather pattern will commence Monday as a weak trough over the Pacific Northwest jumpstarts some onshore flow. By Tuesday and Wednesday, high temperatures will be closer to seasonal averages with highs in the upper 80s to lower 90s in the valleys to 108 in the deserts. A deeper marine layer will allow night through morning low clouds to return to the interior valleys and coastal areas. However, RH above and inland from the marine layer will remain in the teens much of next week. Long range models indicate the relatively cool weather should last through the end of next week.
